Balloon Gas.

Washington Square will be the centre of attraction on the 24th, and you may as well admit that you never heard of the Chicago fire, as to say you were not there. A fine entertainment will be given and among the many features you will find some especially interesting. Independent of the base ball game, the velocipede races and foot races, the balloon in its aerial flight is sufficient to please all beholders. There will be no further opportunity to see a balloon ascension for a long time, so that it will be well with you if you feast your eyes now. Remember that the entertainment costs lots of money, and that if you don't want to see it you can stay at home, but please do not stand around the fence increasing the labor of the policemen, who want time to see the fun themselves. Success to Pioneer's Day and the Olympics.

Another Refutation.

Editors Herald:

In a recent issue of the Tribune, I perused a false statement made by some unknown, but satisfactorily identified being in regard to an assault made by Bishop Smith upon a young man, named George Davis. As an eye witness, I deem it necessary that all not having heard the facts of the case may be correctly informed. All assertions made by the Tribune are based upon falsehood. The Bishop having discharged Davis, whom he had previously employed to work for him, was compelled to do the work himself. One evening as the sun was retiring and the yellow disk shedding its golden luster over all nature, came the Bishop from his daily task tired and fatigued. He stationed himself at his desk to transact some business awaiting him. Davis being in the office, conversation arose between them about an agreement they had made. Davis asserted that Smith had failed to do as he had done more by him than he would have done had it been any other individual, as he had a desire for his welfare, and had acted strictly according to agreement. The young man thinking he had been unjustly dealt with, vindicated his own case, which was extremely annoying to the Bishop, who insisted that he state where in the agreement had been violated. A few moments elapsed and the young man again asserted that he had been unjustly treated, and the agreement had not been regarded. Do you mean to say I lie? ejaculated the Bishop. Yes, I say you have not kept the end and at this moment the Bishop was in the attitude of boxing his ears, but but regaining self possession staid the blow that might have been violent. Davis supposing light the purport, struck a few unfeeling blows, (that is the Bishop did not feel them), at which the Bishop seized him and flung him prostrate to the floor. Regarding their more erect position, nothing further transpired.

It has been reported that Mr. Squibb and the constituents of his clique offered liberally remunerate Davis to enter a charge against the bishop, but Davis possessing much more intelligence than his promoters, and understanding he had irritated the bishop, declined to do so. Mr. Squibb seems in such instances to be very free and liberal with his wealth; but much to the contrary when his creditors he meets.

[From the Leadville Colorado Daily Democrat.]

Politeness never seem to be one of the curiosities exhibited by John Robinson's attaches. The lemonade, candy and fruit "bunches" are prohibited from peddling their wares among the audience, and ladies and children can visit either exhibition, afternoon or night, unattended by gentlemen escort. ## Obituary.

The remains of Mrs. Helena L. Richards, wife of Elder S. W. Richards, were received last evening by Sexton Taylor for interment to-day, which will take place about 11 o'clock a.m. at the family burial place in the city cemetery. Members of the family accompanied the remains from their residence, near Cokeville, Wyo., where she died on the 18th instant, of heart disease and dropsy, the more immediate cause being inanition. She left this city only about three weeks since in very feeble health, hoping a country residence would be a benefit to her, which, however, proved a vain hope. She was a lady of extensive acquaintance in Utah, to whom her unexpected death will be a surprise, and be deeply lamented.

OUR WATER WORKS.

What the Superintendent Says about Waste.

A HERALD reporter yesterday was airing himself about the City Hall, when his attention was attracted by some loud words in the office of the superintendent of water works, No. 8, on the ground floor, and hastening thither he was confronted by an irate and loud-talking female, who was making some hasty remarks in regard to the use of city water for sprinkling purposes. It seems that a notice was published in all the city papers about the latter part of June, directing the attention of water takers to the ordinance relating to the use of pipe water, which provides that sprinklers for lawns, sidewalks, and front yards shall not be operated except at night (between 6 o'clock p.m. and 8 o'clock a.m.) during July, August and September of each year. Several men were then commissioned, in connection with other duties, to watch for violations, and were instructed, if they found anyone sprinkling in the day time, to report to headquarters. The vociferous and angry lady in question had been caught in the act of stashing water all around the lawn and the garden and the sidewalk and out into the street in the broad day and had wasted more than enough to found an enterprising colony on the Jordan sand ridge. She had been notified to stop it, remonstrated with, threatened—but all to no purpose—she had paid for the water, she said, and was going to get her money's worth. So one of the superintendent's men quietly walked to the lady's premises and in a firm but gentlemanly manner turned off the water. It was now wash day and there was no water in the house; but with all her storming the Superintendent sat composedly in his chair and smiled. After this little difficulty was satisfactorily adjusted and the madams had departed, the superintendent turned around to the HERALD man and inquired if he was a fighting editor. Upon receiving answer to the effect that he had been placed in ugly predicaments many times in his long and useful career, but that the scene he had just witnessed was entitled to the confectionery wagon the superintendent smiled again, and running his pen behind his ear, and laying himself back for an extended conversation, began: "The people have many erroneous ideas in regard to our water works. Now, when a person applies for water service, he is required to state definitely the purposes for which the water is to be used, and further agrees to be governed by the existing laws controlling the water supply. Notwithstanding this, there are many who apply for water only for household use, and these are found sprinkling their lawns, irrigating their gardens, etc. Again, many parties have an idea that they are charged for the use of the water. This is an error. The water belongs to the people. They are simply charged for the conveyance which the pipes afford, and the city furnishes an ample and sufficient supply for the purposes asked."

"But," ventured our reporter, "if the water belongs to them, and you charge only for conveying it to them, why are they not privileged to use all they want, so long as they don't use more than their share?"

"In reply to that, I would call to your mind that the drayman will charge you probably fifty cents to haul one box up from the depot, but if he hauls you two boxes, he will charge you a dollar. He brings both boxes on the same trip, carrying the two costs him no more than to carry the one. On the same principle our pipes supply a water taker with water for household use at so much per room and for sprinkling at so much per yard. If the consumer doesn't want to pay for an additional purpose as the rates prescribe, he needn't. He has this alternative. Let him go to City Creek and haul the water down in a wheelbarrow. There are a great many other violations of the ordinances," the superintendent continued, "but they are committed more in ignorance than defiance. You see it would not be necessary to enforce these restrictions to the use of water, were it not for the great scarcity in the summer months, and if people would be economical there would perhaps be plenty for everybody. It is this everlasting waste that compels summary measures. Let me give you a few figures. During the month of June last the consumption of water from the water works was over 5,000,000 gallons in twenty-four hours. We have ten public spouts which discharge about 30,000 gallons in the twenty-four hours, and five drinking fountains which discharge about 10,000 gallons during the same period. This you observe leaves a daily consumption by water takers of 5,000,000 gallons. This, as I stated, was in June, before my notice calling attention to the ordinance restricting sprinklers to the night time was published. However, it was during the operation of motors. Now the consumption averages about 3,500,000 gallons in the twenty-four hours. We have about 800 services. Allowing seven persons to each service, there would be 5,600 consumers, making a daily consumption of over 600 gallons per capita. Now, you will admit that no person is going to use that amount of water in a day. The excess then is used on lawns and by waste. Let me give you a general idea of how lawn sprinklers are operated. The gentleman of the house arises with the sun and sprinkles until breakfast time. When called to his repast he sticks the nozzle between the rounds of a chair and lets the water fire away at some favorite tree. The lady of the house along about 10 o'clock (ladies by the way are extremely fond of sprinkling) concluding that the tree has had its share, waters her flower garden, washes off the front porch, irrigates the fence, drowns the side of the house and then retires to prepare the mid-day meal, leaving the nozzle meanwhile turned heavenward to cool off the air. During this afternoon the little girls of the family squirt all over the sidewalk and bathe pedestrians in cold water and astonishment, till school lets out, when the little boys come home and immediately organize themselves into a fire brigade and seek to extinguish an imaginary conflagration on the roof of the house. They then proceed to wash off the dog and the cat, and finally themselves, and by that time supper is announced, and the old man returns from his toil and takes up the cross, and after sprinkling the lawn until bed time takes off the nozzle (it's dark now) and irrigates a row of choice cabbage. Here the water flows until morning, when the programme is resumed."

"But," laughed our reporter, "all water takers are not lawn sprinklers. How do you account for the waste in such instances?"

"Well," rejoined the superintendent, "take a family of seven; fifty gallons each, or 350 gallons would be an ample daily supply. The master of the house wants a cool drink in the morning—ordinarily a pint of water would satisfy him if he isn't particularly dry. To procure this pint of water he empties the contents of the service pipe—say ten gallons—and if the water is not then sufficiently cool he lets it out indefinitely. A similar performance is repeated by each member of the family who wants a drink. But this is only a portion of the waste. Why not keep the sink sweet and the water cool? And so it is allowed to run in many instances from morning till night; and instead of 350 gallons—which is more than the family really needs—the actual consumption is over 1,500 gallons. If heads of families would be more careful themselves, and instruct their children and dependents to be also, a vast quantity of water might be saved. All licenses distinctly state for what purpose water may be used. When people use it for other purposes, it is simply theft."

At this juncture a tall man in his shirt sleeves rushed excitedly in at the door and said there was a bursted service pipe doing acres of damage in the Seventh Ward, and the superintendent flew away like the wind, leaving our reporter to his own sad thoughts.
